Happy Bob paa Rothery

Happy Bob rat-hunting.

Length about 92 m.

We hereby have the pleasure of introducing to our customers a person, who in future will stir the risible muscles of the audience very often. The name of the Gentleman is Happy Bob. Happy is an American, who like most of his countrymen holds his own and without delay follows any impulse which the capricious fate dictates to him.

Today he is out rat-hunting. Without loosing sight of the object of his wishes, which is to catch the rat, he rushes along after his prey. He does not take the slightest notice of the obstacles in his way. How could anyone expect Happy to deal considerately with those persons, who stand in his way? No, Happy is aiming at a mark, and he will gain his point. Happy keeps perfectly cool during the whole chase, and during the whole of the highly comical scenes, which make the lookers-on burst out laughing, he invariably remains the master of the situation. Happy reaches his object.

When the rat with ist teeth has seized the seat of the trowsers of a man who like many others is infected by Happy's love of the hunting, Happy makes his appearance, and while the suffering gentleman stops his roundel for a moment, the funny rat-hunter quietly pulls out a revolver and shoots the rat. It is to be hoped that he hit the small sexton, at least there is no doubt that he hit the poor fellow who runs away, followed by the whole crowd. Happy is the only one who keeps cool, he is standing there triumphantly like a victor, and the highest joy is to be seen in his more than original features.
