Er der noget der kan faa det til at løbe koldt ned ad Ryggen paa en Ægtemand, saa er det naar der forkyndes ham det Rødselsbudskab, at der skal være Hovedrengøring!

Grosserer Pax har slidt i det hele Dagen paa sit Kontor, nu er det endelig blevet Fyraften og han glæder sig nægtigt til at komme hjem og have det hyggeligt og rart - - - han har nemlig glemt, at hans Kone har besluttet at anvende disse Dage til Afholdelse af den velsignede Familiefest, der hedder $\frac{1}{2}$ aarlig Hovedrengøring. Men han bliver saa sandelig mindet om det straks ved sin Hjemkomst, og det saa eftertrykkeligt, at han sent vil glemme denne Renselsesfest.

- Gutter om Bord -

Vi faar Lov til at kaste et lille Blik ind i den Verden for sig, som en Orlogsmann i rum Sø er, vi overværer "Mændernes" Liv og Færdens, deres Arbejde og Glæder og ser at der er nok af det første men ikke saa overvældende meget af det sidste, naa , selv det strængeste Arbejde kan gaa som en Leg, naar blot det udføres med Liv og Lyst, og - ved denne Lejlighed i det mindste - er der Smil paa alle Ansigter, og selv om det ikke altid er Halløj og Morskab, saa vil den Tid, da man var en af "Mænderne" altid staa med de glade Minders lyse Glorie om sig, thi raskt og sundt er Søguttens Liv.

Wenn es etwas in der Welt gibt, wovor einem Ehemann gruselt, dann ist es das Wort Grossreinmachen.

Herr Pax hat den ganzen Tag in seinem Büro schwer gearbeitet. Jetzt ist er endlich frei und freut sich, nach Hause gehen zu können, und den Abend in Ruhe und Frieden zuzubringen, aber o weh, er hat das Grossreinmachen, welches seine Frau in diesen Tagen veranstaltet, ganz vergessen. Die Tatsache wird ihm aber so nachdrücklich bei seiner Heimkunft eingeprägt, dass er dieses Grossreinmachen nicht leicht vergessen wird.

Troubles of a trip. MEYER OG F.

Mr. Evans and his wife are going out for a holiday. Mr. Evans tells his friends, that he is not going out for a pleasure trip, "the wife is coming too, you know", and Mr. Evans heaves a deep sigh. But Mr. Evans is sly after all, and at the hotel he manages to get separate rooms for himself and his wife, and as soon as she is in bed he steals out and is now going to have a good time. But alas Mrs. Evans gets suspicious, she does not hear the familiar snore from her dear husband. She rushes out of bed and runs into her husband's room! Oh, dear! Mr. Evans' amusement came to a sad end. He was right. His journey cannot exactly be called a pleasure trip.

THE NECKLACE OF THE DEAD. DEN DØDES H.

An evening in autumn the young countess is sitting reading in the garden. She is shivering and feels ill. Her husband comes, and presents her with a magnificent necklace, a very precious gift.

In the next scene we see the countess on the deathbed. The young count stands close by her in great distress. She puts her arms round his neck, but suddenly she is taken with a cramp and she falls back in bed lifeless. The count flings himself on the bed sobbing..

In the big hall of the castle the countess is lying on "lit de parade". The count comes in, bringing flowers and putting the magnificent necklace round her neck. But he must go away. The joiner has come to close the coffin. As he begins his work, he sees the precious ornament which is now to be buried with the dead. He smiles bitter, at home his wife and his child have nothing to eat, he has been out of work, and no money is in the house. It seems to him to be a sin, that such riches shall be buried with the dead, and be of no use to anybody. When he comes back home his little girl is crying with hunger, and in the night he steals to the chapel to take the necklace away. But as he is going to touch it, a hand catches round his arm, and the apparently dead looks at him with wide open eyes. Mad with terror he rushes to the count and tells what has happened, the count follows him quick, and to his great joy and astonishment he finds his dear wife alive. She ~~is~~ herself is overwhelmed with joy with her wonderful escape; she not only forgives the joiner but gives him the necklace, when she learns how hard she has been tempted. The joiner however is terrified with his deed, and as an atonement he gives the necklace to Madonna, ~~and~~ acknowledging that no good can come out of an evil deed.
